

THE TABOR WEEKLY

Photography

Victoria started photography when she was ten years old. She received her first camera at the age of twelve. The camera was a digital Canon EOS Rebel T6 and she has been using it for about four years now. Photography has been a “way of escape “ for Victoria for many years she says, and will continue to be for many more. Growing up Victoria was not considered very athletic and because of this she always felt out of place. Photography is the place or outlet for her creative abilities and has allowed her to meet with people who have similar artistic interests. Over time Victoria has developed many friends and builds confidence in herself through this hobby.

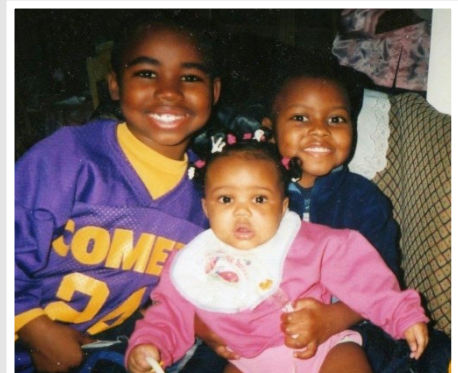

Traveling

Traveling is not something Victoria has been able to do much of. Both of Victoria’s parents traveled a lot when they were kids, so they didn’t feel a desire to continue that tradition with their children. One of the places she would want to visit is the Bamboo Forest in Hawaii. The young teen’s love for photography has inspired her to go to exotic unique places, not just for bragging rights, but to capture the view in all its glory.

“ Theme parks and roller coasters are fun, but it’s the stillness of a moment that I think is worth experiencing “.

Family

A family of five is considered big to some and small to others. For Victoria, a family of five is the perfect size. Victoria grew up in a house with both of her parents and is the youngest of three. Currently, her two older brothers are Brad, age 23, and Jacob, age 19. Victoria’s family isn’t the closest, but when they do spend time together it’s as if no time has passed between their last meeting. As a kid, Victoria spent most of her time with her grandmother, but as she has gotten older she is closest with her dad. Overall, her relationship with her family is a positive one.

Smile!

A baby photo of Victoria (middle) and her siblings, Jacob (right) and Brad (left).